Cardiac myxoma complicating systemic sclerosis. Secondary systemic sclerosis with symptoms attributable to intracardiac mass is extremely rare. We report a 50-year-old woman with extensive systemic sclerosis and pericardial effusion and tamponade requiring pericardial drainage and tumor excision. A large cardiac myxoma was found on histologic examination of the excised pericardium. Systemic sclerosis is a systemic autoimmune disorder characterised by thickening and fibrosis of the connective tissues, resulting in scleroderma of the skin, subcutaneous tissue, muscle and internal organs. Secondary systemic sclerosis can sometimes involve the heart. Although intracardiac masses are usually due to thrombus or angiomatous tumors, cardiac myxoma, a rare benign neoplasm, may be the cause of cardiac tampon
