[Features of the effect of lys- and histidyl-lysine in the cells of the tissues on the formation of selenium-containing protein fractions]. The effect of histidyl-lysine and lys-histidyl-lysine on the formation of protein-bound selenium in the thymus, spleen, liver, bone marrow, and blood plasma was studied in experiments on mice. It was established that histidyl-lysine stimulates the accumulation of selenium in protein fractions. Lys-histidyl-lysine had no effect on the formation of selenium-protein complexes.Saturday, November 22, 2012 Video: The Only Magic Trick A Psychologist Can Play You know those magic tricks, the ones that they "play" for you in the beginning, and then they get boring or they are just plain awful? Here's a magic trick that people can really enjoy. It's called a "Floating Ball" trick. A lot of people have been fooled by this one before. The reason is that it's so simple. You need a glass that will show the ball to float above the deck. This is what it looks like in the beginning: Then, someone dips the ball in chocolate. When the ball is dipped, you can see the white chocolate. Then, the ball is lifted from the chocolate with a spoon. (It's almost like a trick version of a magic trick called the "Solid Ball In Liquid"). The white chocolate is the secret. And then, the ball is lifted from the glass and you get your chocolate. The easy part is done. 2d92ce491b
