Object: A: Google cache of your question : A: Looks like it's the reporting websites like Symantec and McAfee which use some sort of script to download a bunch of updates. In the case of symantec it probably has something to do with periodic batch jobs. Every now and

All files are up to date, and I even tried an install on a new system, and it installed without a hitch! UPDATE: v3.0 of idj.exe fixed the problem. A: You are possibly running into a flash exploit. I imagine this is what has you worried. It's not a virus, it's a game that allows users to see the intro movie for Metal Gear Solid: Peace Walker for free. The problem with this is that those who have it installed do not have to pay for the game. This means that even if you uninstall it, it will still have permission to run. I imagine that in the same way that the author of this exploit wanted to make money, it also wanted to force people to buy the game. The reason for such things in the world of malware is simple: money. Malware is typically sold for a set price or is free, but a growing amount of malware in the form of Trojans is free to get and then asks for money when they are used. Malware authors take advantage of the fact that you will "forget" about an installed program, and they use that to make money. This one is probably not going to make a lot of money, but there's a lot of it floating around out there. struct ipr_ioctl_pdu ioctl_pdu; struct ipr_ioctl_vpd vpd; struct ipr_ioctl_pdl_info pdl_info; }; struct ipr_ioctl_params { struct ipr_ioctl_params *next; int (*ioctl)(struct ipr_ioctl_params *ioctl_params, struct ipr_ioctl_pdu *ioctl_pdu, struct ipr_ioctl_vpd *ioctl_vpd, struct ipr_ioctl_pdl_info *ioctl_pdl_info); struct ipr_ioctl_params *child; struct ipr_ioctl_params *next_child; struct ipr_ioctl_params *parent; }; struct ipr_ioctl_params * 9df0af710a
