(AP Photo/Amr Nabil) CAIRO (AP) — Egypt's President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi was sworn in for a second term Sunday, after leading a military coup that toppled an elected leader and sweeping away the opposition. Hundreds of thousands of people packed the streets to see Sissi and members of the military march into the presidential palace and into a ceremony that began with a 20-minute military prayer. It was a scene of pomp and pageantry that reflects the atmosphere of triumph that Sissi will now be expected to continue as the nation heads into critical political and security transitions. The Muslim Brotherhood, the only organized political party to have played a major role in Egypt's politics, has been effectively banned from participation in the elections that were meant to be held in February. ADVERTISEMENT The Muslim Brotherhood's political arm announced Sunday that a new party would be established in the coming weeks. "Egypt is going to witness a struggle between the military, the police, and the other forces of oppression," former military chief Gen. Kamel Morcos said at the inauguration. In a nation that has experienced political instability throughout the last two decades, Sissi's presidency has been a period of relative stability and economic growth. But the population has been spooked by the political crisis that followed his ouster of President Mohammed Morsi in 2013 and the ensuing crackdown against the Brotherhood.
