Introduction to Operations. Author: Cathie My name is Catherine, I have a passion for running and hope to share my experiences of running with others. Aged 50 in January 2017, this blog will follow my running adventures as I work at the crossroads of life, love and running... It's the big day, the day you've been looking forward to, the day you finally get to see the nice person that lives in the flat opposite yours. The day when you finally get to put a picture up in your hallway. Bella has been with us for a few years now, and we're really proud of how well she's behaved. Her only fault in life is that she's a bit of a b*. But we know this means she's not a bad dog, and we've been careful to stop all the other dogs running. And then it happened. The day when she started chasing them. The annoying barker was out in the flat opposite, as usual. The annoying bit is that she's an annoying barker because she goes out on the balcony and barks really loud every time we open the front door. She's been doing this for as long as we can remember. Well, at the weekend, she managed to get Bella chasing the dogs into the flat opposite us. They did their best to ignore her, but she just wouldn't leave it alone. And the barking escalated. Really loud barking. When we were at the park earlier today, a couple of the neighbours were concerned. What if she went over the fence and went chasing the dogs? What if she started barking at them? Would the dog have to be put down? What will happen to Bella if they 2d92ce491b
