Free Theatrical Trailer: Fans of Stephen King's The Dark Tower series have some new.Q: Run multiple times in the same program? I'm trying to make a program that has multiple inputs and inputs and outputs. I have a class and the constructor: class Test(): name = input("Write your name: ") def __init__(self, name): self.name = name self.history() def history(self): print("Your history is: ", end = "") self.inputs = [] self.history() print() def add(self): self.inputs.append(self.name) Now when I run the program I'd like to enter a name and then, every time I run the program again, I'd like to see the history, and add an input. I've tried to make the program that way, but every time I run the program I get an error: NameError: name'self' is not defined Thanks for any help. A: You need to make the history a method that you call, not a function, and you also need to make the add method a method. class Test(): name = input("Write your name: ") def __init__(self, name): self.name = name self.history() def history(self): print("Your history is: ", end = "") self.inputs = [] self.history() print() def add(self): self.inputs.append(self.name) def history(self): print(self.inputs) def main(): test =
