This study investigates the potential of a well established and highly productive local maize cultivar, Bionda Italia, to develop maize hybrid seed production in Siena, a northern Italian region with a mid-latitude, continental climate and a semi-arid soil. Seedlings were grown in pots of 15 cm diameter and 30 cm height. The biomass, number of leaves and ears per plant, dry shoot weight, ear weight, size and diameter of ears, kernel weight, kernel number per ear and cob weight and number were measured. Maize cultivars, hybrids and F1 hybrids including Bionda Italia were compared to each other. The total number of ear in the seven hybrid treatments was 2,218 (352 +/- 0.4 kg/ha), the number of kernels per ear was 2,102 (3.61 +/- 0.06 kg/ha) and the kernel weight was 0.53 +/- 0.01 kg/m(3). Grain yield was the highest of the local cultivar Bionda Italia (43.11 kg/ha) and the F1 hybrid 2010-2010 (43.35 kg/ha) followed by the F1 hybrid 2010-2009 (44.63 kg/ha) and by the inbred line 2008-2009 (44.96 kg/ha). All F1 hybrids were intermediate in yield to the local cultivar and inbred line Bionda It

Clojure also suffers from the same problem with basic types as JavaScript, that is you cannot pass a primitive constant to a function, which is strange because they are primitive types. This also means they aren’t interoperable with generic Clojure. This could be fixed by forcing all identifiers to be keywords but this is a major limitation on its ability to be used in real code. Another consideration is the other approach allows you to use a heap-allocated object as a generic type that includes primitive constants, something that JavaScript doesn’t support. TypeScript also forces you to call the object constructor, which has some nice advantages over generic JavaScript: The prototype is forced to be defined by default, which allows multiple dispatch The prototype is immutable Adding an identifier as a function parameter is implicit Using this approach on values is safe and type-safe. One of the reasons for this design is the interface is heavily based on JavaScript, so that the compiler can understand and type-check it. This means that if TypeScript is used to generate a TypeScript-like codebase, it will be much easier to work in and modify. Actually, TypeScript is easier to work in than JavaScript TypeScript is actually much easier to work with than JavaScript. It provides several restrictions to make this possible: The type signatures don’t allow for any type casts This is enforced by the compiler so you have to use compile-time type checking for ba244e880a
