In this eye-opening story, the brothers were driving through their hometown in eastern France when their car was broken down on a country road. On the side of the road, a police officer offered to take them to the nearest village to repair their vehicle, but he ended up taking them on a ride,'sans famille' (without family) to a station that was in the middle of nowhere. Scroll down for video The brothers were driving through their hometown in eastern France when their car broke down on a country road. They were asked to drive to the nearest village to repair their vehicle, but instead they ended up in this station But as the brothers continued to converse with the officer, they got a sudden surprise when they went into the station shop. On display, they saw a 'Guess Who?' type of game with prizes, with the brothers' faces being stuck on the 50,000-franc (£32,450) jackpot. As the brothers took a closer look at the prize, they couldn't believe their eyes. It didn't make any sense. The brothers were going to come out empty-handed, but the officer was so nice that he wanted to make sure they'd have a good time while on their trip. So he put them in the back of a station-equipped bus and took them to the station, which is even more isolated than where they'd left their car, the Express reported. At first, the brothers believed that the officers wanted to get paid by taking them to the station, but they just ended up on a fun 2d92ce491b
