structures in the region are: The iliopsoas muscle covers the iliacus and psoas major muscles on both sides. It arises by short tendons from the lesser trochanter of the femur and the greater trochanter of the iliac crest, passes over the iliacus, and inserts by tendons into the spine of the last lumbar vertebra. The iliacus and psoas major muscles are both located at the lateral side of the pelvis. The iliacus muscle is a straight muscle, while the psoas major is diagonal. The iliacus is a major component of the iliopsoas and the quadratus lumborum. The iliopsoas muscle is very superficial and very large compared to other muscles of the body.

It is close to the surface of the body; its posterior and lateral borders are palpable. In the human, this muscle arises from the iliac crest and inserts on the iliocostal and lumbosacral spinal articulations. The anterior border is covered by the rectus abdominis muscle, and the lateral and posterior borders are covered by the latissimus dorsi and trapezius muscles. The anterior part of the iliacus is covered by the quadratus lumborum muscle. The posterior part of the iliacus is covered by the obturator internus muscle. It runs along the inner border of the iliacus to the lateral border of the pubic symphysis, and then runs on the medial surface of the
