22 standard-capacity magazines by the U.S. military in 2003, the .223 Remington cartridge was adopted by the civilian market, with the National Rifle Association (NRA) endorsing the cartridge as a better-suited successor to the .223 Remington. A standard-capacity ammunition magazine can hold up to 15 rounds, allowing for a longer effective range than the previous standard-capacity ammunition magazine, the 30-round magazine, which can hold only 10 rounds. The .223 Remington cartridge is capable of firing a bullet at per second. This high muzzle velocity makes the cartridge extremely powerful for its size. The cartridge is slightly larger than the .22 Long Rifle cartridge, allowing for .22LR ammunition to be chambered in the more powerful .223 Remington cartridge and vice versa. The cartridge was adopted by the United States military for the M16, M4, and M4A1 rifles. It also saw use in the M240 machine gun, the M60 machine gun, and the M240E1 machine gun. The cartridge has also been used in a variety of civilian .223 bolt-action and semi-automatic rifles, including the Ruger Mini-14, the Ruger Precision Rifle, the Savage Model 11 and Model 14, and the Savage Model 10, among others. The .223 Remington cartridge has seen use in over 20 different types of ammunition, including non-lethal rounds such as the 9mm Luger and .45 ACP, as well as conventional rounds for medium- to heavy-caliber military rifles such as the 5.56×45mm NATO. Origin of the .223 Remington cartridge The .223 Remington cartridge was designed by the Remington Arms Company in response to the U.S. military's rejection of its previous cartridge, the .22 Long Rifle. The .223

Remington cartridge is based on the 7.62×39mm cartridge, the Soviet AK-47 round, and the NATO standard 5.56×45mm NATO round. The .223 Remington cartridge was introduced in 1984. The first .223 Remington ammunition was chambered in the M16 rifle and was adopted by the U.S. military in 1985. The cartridge is used in a variety of other weapons, including the M240 machine gun, the M60 machine gun, and the M240E1 machine gun. History The .223 Remington cartridge was designed in response to the U.
