The corporate world is as uncertain as ever. It's not just because the global economy is in tatters, leaving investors fretful over the impact on their portfolios. It's also because the tech sector has become a kind of a stand-in for the unknown, as all eyes focus on the path that the next hot sector will take. A new index developed by the online brokerage Ally Invest looks to take a close, detailed look at the ups and downs of the most popular tech stocks. And, in that regard, we know one thing: It's been a volatile year, even for the tech sector. Even though the sector as a whole is up nearly 20% since the beginning of the year, the biggest names in tech — Apple, Amazon and Netflix — have been at the center of volatility. But as the year rolls on, it's clear that more bullish expectations are in the air, meaning that tech is moving in a positive direction. If Ally Invest's tech-focused technology index is any indication, it seems like it's going to be a pretty good year. Ally Invest's technology index (TTI) has the potential to explode next year. The tech sector is up almost 15% in the last three months alone, according to Ally Invest. That may not sound like much, but it actually means a lot for investors, because the tech sector is up 19% on the year. And Ally Invest's technology index has the potential to explode next year.

According to my calculations, Ally Invest's technology index is on track to gain nearly 55% this year. That means that the investment might take a nice little breather and then keep going in the right direction next year. Here are some more tech-related numbers from Ally Invest that suggest it's poised to be a good year: Amazon's (AMZN) cloud business has been one of the most anticipated developments in the tech
