Left ventricular myocardial infarction: correlation between myocardial necrosis and left ventricular function by radionuclide techniques. Transaxial tomographic left ventricular wall motion and left ventricular ejection fraction (LVEF) were performed before and 2 weeks, 1 month, and 2 months after acute myocardial infarction in 34 patients (14 men and 20 women) to determine the correlation between myocardial necrosis and left ventricular function. Overall, LVEF was 38 +/- 13% (mean +/- SD) before infarction, 35 +/- 16% 2 weeks after infarction, 30 +/- 13% 1 month after infarction, and 43 +/- 15% 2 months after infarction. The ejection fraction fell progressively over the postinfarction period but not significantly. Wall motion improved significantly over the first 2 postinfarction weeks in the infarct region. Regional wall motion improved significantly more than global LVEF over the postinfarction period (P less than.0001). The proportion of patients with global or regional wall motion improvement was better at 2 weeks after infarction (55% and 80%, respectively) than at any other time postinfarction. Overall, global LVEF correlated well with segmental wall motion (r =.76, P less than.0001). In particular, at 2 weeks after infarction, global LVEF correlated strongly with the mean systolic blood pressure difference from the 2d92ce491b
