Field of the Invention This invention relates to a cigarette filter rod especially adapted for smoking of filterless cigarettes wherein the filter plug is blown off from the filter plug retainer which is attached to the filter rod with such force that when the filter rod is rotated a number of times relative to a filter rod holder in the holder head thereof, the filter plug is gradually loosened and lifted from the filter plug retainer, thus, it is possible to remove the plug from the holder head and to remove the plug from the cigarette butt. 2. Description of the Prior Art Conventional filter plug retainer rings of filter plug retainers for smoking filterless cigarettes are provided with a number of substantially U-shaped holes which are aligned in a straight line. Due to this configuration, in the course of the rotation of the filter rod with respect to the holder head of the holder, the rings are often wedged between the filter rod and the holder head. This causes the filter plug to be gradually loosened from the ring during rotation and not only the sealing off of air from the cigarette butt is unsatisfactory but, in addition, smoke enters into the filter rod and, accordingly, the taste is worsened. Another drawback of the filter plug ret 1cb139a0ed
