1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a self-propelled work machine such as, for example, a forklift. 2. Description of the Related Art In the prior art, a self-propelled work machine such as a forklift includes a main body frame, a left-hand lower structure, a right-hand lower structure, and a front-end working unit. The main body frame includes left and right main frames each of which extends obliquely upward from front portions thereof in the left and right directions and are pivotably connected to each other at a midpoint thereof in the rear direction via a connecting bracket. The left and right lower structures are respectively disposed left and right of the main frames. The front-end working unit is disposed at a front end of the main body frame in the longitudinal direction of the main body frame and includes a steering wheel, a seat, and a bucket. The left-hand lower structure includes a boom connected to the left main frame of the main body frame, and a left side lift and a left side latch which are connected to the boom. The right-hand lower structure includes a boom connected to the right main frame of the main body frame, and a right side lift and a right side latch which are connected to the boom. In the prior art, when the work machine is used, in order to prevent the main body frame from being lifted up relative to the lower structure during excavation or the like using the front-end working unit, a jack is used for applying an upward pressure on each of the left and right main frames so as to prevent the main body frame from rising up relative to the lower structure. However, in the prior art, there is a risk that the jack, which is to be connected to each of the left and right main frames, should be loosened. In addition, in the prior art, the jack is connected to each of the left and right main frames, which are rotatable in a horizontal direction with respect to the axis of the boom, via a supporting rod. For this reason, even when the jack is loosened, the main body frame can be prevented from rising up relative to the lower structure. Further, in the prior art, a hydraulic cylinder is further provided between the lower structure and the main body frame, whereby a vertical lifting force is exerted on each of the main frames by the hydraulic cylinder so as to prevent the main body frame from rising up relative
