I have a python script that reads the CSV and imports it into another sheet named (imports to, imports from) The first thing my python script does is merge all the data over to the other sheet. The script is as follows: import csv from openpyxl import load_workbook from openpyxl.utils.data import data_load #Open the CSV file file = r'C:\Users\Me\Desktop\Final\Data\Import\Data.csv' #The workbook object is used to access all the sheets in the Excel file workbook = load_workbook(file) #The dict of the sheet name to the sheet object is used to iterate over all the sheets and replace the name if not yet existent sheet_id_dict = {k: v for k, v in workbook.worksheets.items() if k!='summary'} #Get all the sheets sheets = workbook.worksheets #Create the parent sheet parent_sheet = workbook.create_sheet('Summary') #Iterate over all the sheets in the workbook and create the corresponding objects. for sheet in sheets:

It is served by the B36 bus to Grand Central Parkway. The station is located on the border of the neighborhoods of Belmont Village, Vanderbilt Heights, and Bronxwood in the Bronx and is served by the. History The structure is an Italianate design, with lower level mezzanines and an overhang, constructed by the New York City Board of Rapid Transit in 1929 and designed by the architectural firm of Starcher and Harris. Station signage is by lettering artist Henry Groh, with color scheme derived from the New York, Westchester and Boston Railway. Station layout The station has two side platforms and two tracks. The two tracks, like all other lines of the subway, are not in the center of the platforms, but straddle the median, with the southbound tracks on the west side of the platform and the northbound tracks on the east side. The station entrance is on the southeast corner of Broadway and East 187th Street, or the southeast corner of 187th Street and East 187th Street. A mezzanine level with about 10 feet of track running through the center divides the two island platforms. Underneath the platform, there are two tracks that were originally used by the West End Line to connect to the IRT Jerome Avenue Line, but these tracks were removed in 1948. The tunnel was used to house a number of storage tracks in the years before the New York City Transit Authority was formed. Exits The station has one fare control area at the platform level, with a token booth at the northwest corner of Broadway and East 187th Street. There are no station houses or platforms at either end of the platforms. There are, however, staircases leading to the sidewalks on each side. Only the southwest corner has exit stairs from the mezzanine to the street level. Inside the fare control area, there is an unused set of stairs leading down to the northbound platform, but these were not used after 1928. B36 bus routes The B36 bus route runs along a two-lane limited-access highway that runs along the tracks from the Nassau Avenue 3da54e8ca3
