No measuring or weighing of ingredients is required, just put all of the parts together and voila! You have a meal that is ready in under 30 minutes. I could hardly believe how easy this concept was to me, and though I love books of this nature, it was hard to decide on which I wanted to feature first - the recipes for a crockpot or the ones for an outdoor grill. Since the book is all of one-dish recipes and all have one ingredient, I decided to take a gamble and go with the crockpot. But that meant that the grill recipes were going to be placed at the bottom. I started off with the BBQ Pork. It was a bit of a process to prepare. After chopping the onions and potatoes, I seasoned them with salt and pepper and then tossed them into the crock pot along with the pork, brown sugar, and about half of a can of A-1 sauce. The pork turned out to be succulent and the sauce made the combination even yummier. Also in the crockpot were the Tomato Garlic Corn Chowder. When you make this dish, you'll see why they call this the "Ladybug Soup". Chunky, with spinach and meat chunks. It was one of my favorites. As the corn was sitting in the soup, some larger and perfectly formed corn niblets could be found floating around inside. Wow! I hadn't seen that before. And then there were the smoky mashed potatoes that complemented the flavor of the pork so well. Chana Masala from Pakistan. The pictures shown are from the New York Times, featuring a recipe for chicken masala, which is essentially a chicken curry. In our home, we have always used this recipe as a base for our own 09e8f5149f

Supporters of the Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro attend a rally against the U.S. sanctions imposed on the country, in Caracas, Venezuela May 18, 2019. REUTERS/Carlos Garcia Rawlins The comments by Attorney General Tarek William Saab came hours after the opposition leader's team announced its first meeting with "civil society" representatives, saying it aimed to stop the economic crisis and violence in Venezuela. The talks with Guaido, which opposition officials said led to a declaration of support from dozens of countries to start a dialogue, were the latest attempt by Venezuelans split over who should be ruling the country, which is facing severe food and medicine shortages. U.S. President Donald Trump recognized Guaido as interim president in January, saying Maduro's May 2018 re-election was fraudulent. Maduro, who says he is the victim of an attempted U.S. coup, has ruled Venezuela with an iron fist, cracking down on dissent and driving Venezuela toward an economic collapse. "This (Guaido) a traitor, an absolute traitor," said Saab during a daily news conference, without clarifying who he thought was responsible for organizing
