My goal is to: clone from my repo to a directory copy the files from the clone into the current directory merge the files in the current directory with the files in the repository. My problem is that I cannot get the clone working. Currently I am getting the following error on step 1): Cloning into 'C:\work\...' hg: abort: internal error: unable to start marshal_thread: win32 error 10054 Please tell me how to fix this problem. A: I have had some experiences with Mercurial on a Windows platform, but I don't have experience with the exact error you have mentioned. In these cases, you may be able to use the cmd shell to run the following command: hg clone --ssh... If that doesn't work, you may try a different approach. Some Mercurial users have reported success with the following procedure: Set the HgExecutionPolicy registry key to 0. Restart the cmd shell. Run Mercurial, and on the first Mercurial prompt, press CTRL-C to end the Mercurial instance. Navigate to the folder where you want the repository to be cloned. Use the Windows shell to run the following command: 3da54e8ca3
