Directive of September 26, 1994, as amended by Directive 2006/ 116/ EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 March 2006, and will be available on the internet at: Domain name: AUTOCORRECT WALLPAPER.NET. The goal of this proposal is to develop radiolabeled and photolabeled small molecule ligands for the serotonin transporter (SERT), the norepinephrine transporter (NET) and the dopamine transporter (DAT). The specific aims of this research are: 1. To develop and optimize radiolabeled and photolabeled ligands for the SERT,

NET and DAT. A novel strategy of 3D-quantitative structure-activity relationship (3D-QSAR) will be used for designing novel radiolabeled ligands. 2. To validate the novel radioligands. The most promising lead will be submitted to the National Toxicology Program's (NTP) in vivo rat photolabeling studies (Lee, et al., 1999). 3. To study regional brain uptake and efflux of the radiolabeled ligands. SERT, NET and DAT are important therapeutic targets for the treatment of depression, anxiety, pain, drug abuse and Alzheimer's disease.

However, the pharmacologic properties of these transporters vary considerably among different brain regions. Further, little information is available on the specific regional brain uptake and efflux of the SERT, NET and DAT. The results of the proposed studies will provide valuable information on regional uptake and efflux of these transporters and may provide better targets for therapeutic agents.

Like a small shot of espresso before a big game, Lifesize's iDisplay software doesn't exactly get a lot of attention. That all changes today, though. I've had my eye on Lifesize's free iDisplay software for some time now. What makes it appealing is that it does all the work for you. LifeSize's free iDisplay quickly converts images you find on the web into an all-resolution slideshow. The best part of the free app is that it learns from your behavior and modifies its slideshow based on your chosen preferences. Screenshot For example, the iDisplay app is set to automatically create playlists based on your geographic location. Once enabled, the app should automatically create a slideshow that includes a certain number of photos depending on your location. So, if you are in the US, it'll create a slideshow that includes 6 photos, if you are in the UK, it'll show 5 photos. It's easy to configure Lifesize iDisplay, too. You can change the slideshow's duration, speed, and number of photos. You can also upload your own images or use the slideshow's intelligent cropping system. You can even turn off the slideshow altogether and create a slideshow entirely from your collection of images. What makes iDisplay even more convenient is its automatic slideshow creation. As soon as you point your browser to Lifesize iDisplay, the iDisplay app will automatically create a slideshow based on your preferences. And because the app can adapt to your behavior, you'll never have to tweak your slideshow again! Since iDisplay automatically creates a slideshow based on your behavior, it's not just applicable to LifeSize's own images. You can use this same method to create a slideshow based on any image you find on the web. While you're watching Lifesize iDisplay's slideshow, the slideshow's intelligent cropping system will

Chief Executive Officer Tim Sloan is re-evaluating the bank's growth strategy amid public doubts about the company's ability to generate profit. "I understand the frustration, and it is real," Sloan said at a conference in New York on Thursday. "The truth is, we have lost some of the benefit of the doubt with clients, and the truth is, we have not been executing as fast as we had in the past." Sloan has in recent weeks been nailing down deals to sell off assets, such as another $2 billion in commercial real estate loans and selling thousands of branches, a process that started in earnest after the bank named a head of private-banking in a May 5 interview. The following month, the bank said the chief executive officer in charge of that business, John Shrewsberry, would leave at the end of June. "We think the client and industry
