1. Choose Image → Open. The Open dialog box opens, where you can navigate to the `_Baking_` folder, or even the My Pictures folder on the CD. 2. Locate the file `bk.psd` and click Open. Photoshop opens and appears to load the file. You're now looking at the default (or, as it's known to Photoshop power users, "corrected") view of the image. This is the view in which a single image file has no layers. You can see through the top layer, which is the background layer; see a visible layer below that one; and see a layer underneath that one, which is the blue sky layer, in Figure 7-1.

Q: How to add and remove classes to a UICollectionView I have two classes. One representing a person and the other representing their activities (doctor/patient/patient bed). Each activity has a different UI element and appears in a different part of the app. I want to have a collection view where on each cell I can decide which collection view cell to display. As an example, in "The Doctors" I would have a collection view, where on each cell I would have the four options: Doctor Patient Bed Patient Meds For the "Patients", "Bed Patients" and "Meds" the picture below shows what I want to display. I am planning to use the collectionView(collectionView: UICollectionView, numberOfItemsInSection section: Int) -> Int and collectionView(collectionView: UICollectionView, cellForItemAtIndexPath indexPath: NSIndexPath) -> UICollectionViewCell methods. How can I add/remove the class for each cell to set different background colors? A: In this case you probably have one view controller with two UICollectionViews in it. Each collection view is derived from a common parent view (or one of them). You are usually not allowed to know how the cells are represented internally in a collection view. If you view.backgroundColor is red, it is because you set it to red in either the CollectionViewDelegate or UICollectionViewLayout. I guess that the case is like this: func collectionView(_ collectionView: UICollectionView, didSelectItemAt indexPath: IndexPath) { let cellViewModel = yourCollectionViewModel[indexPath.row] cellViewModel.setColor(.red) collectionView.performBatchUpdates({ // this will update the entire collection view, but no cells }) } And in your view model: class ViewModel { var colors = [.blue,.yellow,.red] } If you want to show different colors in different sections of your collection view, you could either use an enum: enum Section { case doctor

Photoshop does not always tell you when you have made a mistake. You might save an image, only to discover that it does not contain the information you want. There is no undo after you have pressed "Save," so mistakes accumulate and become more difficult to remove. You can use a history log, which lets you save a series of actions and undo them later, to overcome this problem. The History panel, on the left side of the workspace, is an important part of the Photoshop tool palette. When you select an action, you can drag the arrow to the left and it displays the other actions you have saved. By checking off actions in this panel, you can do a cumulative undo of all past actions. If you want to undo the current action, highlight it, press DELETE or CMD+Z. The History panel is located beneath the "Brush" icon in the Tool Palette. You can also check off the list of actions by the "History" button (the small square in the toolbar. Just right-click the button, select "History," and click OK.) The History panel contains a button, which allows you to go to the first step in the history log. This is useful when you have checked off all the actions from a step, and you are looking for an action that you missed. However, it is not very useful for undoing actions. For that, you want to select a previous step in the history log. The status bar at the bottom of the workspace displays the number of active actions in the History panel. You can change the number of steps by right-clicking on the status bar and changing the number. Brushes also feature a number of effects that can make your paintings more professional. Examples of Brush Effects The following are some of the most common brush effects. You can find more in the Brush Tutorial. Dynamic Brush erodes background layers. The brush is comprised of numerous individual dots. The dots are the source of the line, which is the part that is drawn. You can change the distance between the dots by holding down the Key command. You can increase or decrease the size of the brush by increasing or decreasing the size of the dot. To do this, right-click on the brush and select the desired size. The brush does not erode dots. Instead, the old dots are removed, and the new color
