==============================A machine learning model predicts risk of death and disability from alexithymia, type D and the interaction between these. Alexithymia is a personality construct that has been shown to be highly prevalent in the general population and also in groups of patients with personality disorders. However, studies on the impact of alexithymia on illness and mortality have produced heterogeneous results. On the one hand, alexithymia seems to be related to poorer health in general. On the other hand, alexithymia seems to promote the development of psychological distress and affective disorders, which in turn may have a significant impact on prognosis. We set up a regression model to predict the risk of death and disability in a population of patients with a primary psychiatric disorder. The sample consisted of 86 patients (74 women) with a primary psychiatric disorder (53 with panic disorder and 33 with major depression). All patients received a structured clinical interview for DSM IV-Axis II Disorders, the Michigan Personality Disorder Examination, the Beck Depression Inventory, the Toronto Alexithymia Scale, the Short Form Health Survey and the modified Kaplan-Meyer disability scale. Among other demographic characteristics, we examined the ability of personality characteristics, alexithymia and the interaction between alexithymia and the type D personality trait to predict survival time. We found that higher levels of alexithymia were 09e8f5149f
