The present invention relates to an apparatus and method for improved centrifugal testing of molten glassware and especially to an improved apparatus which makes possible the continuous testing of molten glassware while permitting a reasonable rate of production and yet obtaining accurate and reproducible results. As is well known, testing of the quality of molten glassware is extremely desirable and it is highly desirable to have such apparatus which is practical for production purposes, since defective glassware results in high labor costs and a waste of the components which are used in producing such glassware. Apparatus to test molten glassware in two distinct groups are known in the prior art. One group includes apparatus in which the glassware to be tested is divided into two groups. The first group is tested and the second group is discharged and formed. A second group of known apparatus perform the test without dividing the glassware into two groups but require a first group of glassware to be moved in a line from a furnace to a package mold for initially forming the glassware into the desired shape, and then the remaining glassware is fed from the package mold into a further package mold and similarly formed. Some apparatus of this type require a very complex moulding cycle to be performed and when glassware is to be formed into a container a large number of moving parts are required. The present invention is not intended to be limited to an apparatus in which glassware is divided into two groups since this obviously will result in inefficient use of such apparatus. In addition, apparatus having a bowl with two groups of glassware moving vertically therethrough are known to the prior art. One such apparatus is illustrated in U.S. Pat. No. 3,267,100 wherein the glassware is first conveyed in one direction and then conveyed in the opposite direction, however, this is done by providing a drive belt which is driven in one direction and then is reversed by a pivotal plate. Optimizing the tandem distillation column is the combination of chromatographic columns (i.e., columns where only one of the phases does not pass through the column
