The Effect of Organic Matter on the Formation of Colloidal Particles and Their Aggregation in Ultrafiltration Membrane Process of Water

Treatment. A lab-scale batch study was conducted to evaluate the formation and aggregation of colloidal particles during ultrafiltration (UF) membrane processes of water treatment. The results showed that colloidal particles in the feed significantly reduced the permeate flux and membrane performance, and some colloidal particles were found to agglomerate as larger aggregates in the concentrate to form flocs and block the membrane pores. The effects of the colloidal particle concentration and type of colloidal particles on the formation of colloidal particles and their aggregation in UF membrane were investigated. The colloidal particles in the feed could be either destabilized or destabilized and agglomerated as the colloidal particles in the feed were destabilized and destabilized and agglomerated. The colloidal particles in the feed could be destabilized and agglomerated by the UF membrane process. surprise that an alien-like event has already occurred on Earth. There have been a few close calls over the past few years, especially in terms of spacecraft and satellites. And now, a new piece of debris has surfaced that is like nothing we have seen before. The object, estimated to be between 2 and 4 meters wide, is moving through space at high speed. In fact, scientists believe it has already escaped the atmosphere at around 25,000 km/h. This means it may be able to crash land on any planet or asteroid that it encounters. [Image:

NASA] The first piece of debris, which was discovered on January 20, 2010, had only one active feature: it was rotating rapidly.

Researchers think that it came from a former asteroid or comet, and in the past few years, something very similar happened. [Image: NASA]
