A: The problem is that you use the flag `-ignorecomponents` in your `cmake` command, which is only appropriate for Windows and not for Linux. Run: `cmake -G "Unix Makefiles" -DCMAKE_BUILD_TYPE=RELEASE -DUSE_SPLIT_BOOL=ON \ -DCMAKE_INSTALL_PREFIX:PATH=/opt/isobusterpro` in Terminal. It will create an `isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.tar.gz` and place it in the same directory (i.e. you can open it in file manager). In the next step, move the `isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.tar.gz` file to the `lib` folder of your `IsobusterPro`. Run: `cmake.. -DCMAKE_BUILD_TYPE=RELEASE -DUSE_SPLIT_BOOL=ON -DCMAKE_INSTALL_PREFIX=/opt/isobusterpro` in Terminal. It will create a `Debug` folder with a `.deb` package. Now, copy the `.deb` package to your Linux system: `cp isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.deb /usr/local/bin` There should be more icons in the Dash in Windows for `IsobusterPro`. NOTE: The dev-build versions have not been tested on Linux. If you want to use a different destination, change the `cp` command to: `cp isobusterpro-4.5.1-unix-64bit.deb /usr/local/bin/` You will also need to change the path in the `IsobusterPro.desktop` file in `/usr/share/applications`. If you want to use `IsobusterPro` to check for a file, you can put it in a folder and launch it through the command line. The command used is: `isobusterpro.exe -i YOUR_DEVICE_NAME -e YOUR_FILE_NAME` If you are comfortable with the command line, you can put this in a script and make it executable. It needs to have the path to `IsobusterPro` as the first argument in the script. So in you GUI front-end is going to launch the above. `9df0af710a`
