" in question. The first argument is the application of a "different remedy" than called for by the contract. Even if a different remedy was intended, that intent is not clear from the contract. The second argument is that the Post Office acted in bad faith in handling the matter and that this is within the "difference" referred to in the contract. 19 Mr. Coursey obtained a postal error letter from the post office in Eureka, Nevada, showing that the stamps he was requesting had been cancelled, stating as a reason, "Your request cannot be processed due to the following reason: This stamp is not registered with the Direct Mailing System." The contract says, "If... mail in such case should be returned to sender, the sender shall be responsible for payment to the Post Office of postage necessary to mail the mail back to sender. However, the contract goes on to say, "Prior to the refund of any postage paid under this provision, the Postal Services shall recover charges for the postage in which the returnable mail is misdirected to an unauthorized addressee." 20 From the above quoted language, it is clear that Mr. Coursey knew it was possible that he would be billed for postage. It is reasonable to assume that he would not have wanted to pay, for he merely wanted a refund. The fact that the mails were returned to him because of the cancellation, does not place liability for charges incurred on the returnable mail upon the United States Postal Service. 21 This case is clearly not one of " 3e33713323
