Nevertheless, Asset UPnP comes loaded with practical and approachable options to help you share an audio library across multiple devices. I have a feeling that part of the problem was that at some point in the past, iirc GStreamer did not have support for the Content-Disposition header, which is used by Android's MIME type for both audio and video files. I'm not sure if this is a known issue, but since GStreamer's mime functionality was not very matured at that point, it may have led to Asset's failure to decode the mime type.
