Different classes of wireless communications systems, including general packet radio service (GPRS), enhanced data rate for GSM evolution (EDGE), wideband code division multiple access (WCDMA), code division multiple access (CDMA), and others, are used for transmission of cellular data. CDMA is a type of spread spectrum communication technique, where transmission of data over a communication channel is accomplished by modulating the data to be transmitted with a spreading code, such as a pseudorandom code sequence, also referred to as a “spread sequence”. The spreading code takes the form of a long sequence of binary bits, sometimes referred to as a “chipset”. During transmission, the binary data to be transmitted is modulated with the spreading code to produce a stream of coded bits referred to as a spread spectrum signal. This spread spectrum signal is transmitted over the communication channel. A receiver that has acquired the spread spectrum signal can use a corresponding despreading code, such as a correlation despreading code, to recover the data sent by the transmitter. A similar approach is used for conducting cellular data transactions through conventional (i.e., non-wireless) telephone systems (e.g., public switched telephone networks (PSTNs)). Here, the term “cellular telephone” is used generically, and does not necessarily refer to a mobile telephone. That is, a cellular telephone may be used as a portable telephone, a fixed telephone, or some other telephone that is connected to the PSTN. During a cellular data transaction using a conventional telephone, a connection is made between a base station of the PSTN, which is referred to as an “air interface” in such a case, and the cellular telephone. The base station and the cellular telephone are wirelessly coupled so that information such as voice or data may be transmitted between them. The aforementioned wireless communications system data rates are fixed and are relatively slow. Consequently, many different wireless communications technologies have been proposed that provide faster data rates. For example, second generation (2G) communication systems such as, for example, the Global System for Mobile Communications (GSM), generally provide data rates of around 14.4 kbps. Next-generation wireless communications systems, such as 3G communication

While the rest of the world was occupied by the carnage in Paris last November, in Western Australia the secret police, the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions, over-tipped its hand on the issue of murder by a drunken street gang. On 9 December 2017 the DPP charged three men with five counts of murder in connection with the death of five young people in the Perth suburb of Balcatta in early 2016. In February last year police found a massacre had taken place. Five men had been murdered. “All five victims had been beaten, repeatedly shot and stabbed and their bodies dragged and dumped on the street.” The offenders were the Karaj, a criminal street gang operating in the north-western suburbs of Perth. The five men who were murdered were Aziz Dandarwan, 21; Muhammad Nasrullah, 20; Mustafa Yakoub, 22; Himi Abdullah, 21; and Neeraj Kumar, 18.

The guilty men are now on trial. Earlier this week the jury at the WA Supreme Court heard evidence that at an unknown time in 2015, when the Karaj were believed to be on holidays in Dubai and Istanbul, three of them decided they would return to Perth. They did so in the hope of reclaiming an illegal five-bedroom block on Swan Street in Balcatta, long the home for members of the Karaj. The block had been bought by Aziz Dandarwan, the 21-year-old driver of the gang in the lead-up to the murders, who had stolen the property from its original owners, according to the charges.
