De Blasio, a potential vice-presidential running mate, said Clinton's win last year in the presidential election paved the way for Democrats to win back the White House in 2016. "It's a sign of the times to be a Democrat and to be in politics right now," de Blasio, who supported her husband Bill Clinton in the 2008 presidential contest, told Reuters in an interview. "If anything, it helps clarify what it means to be a Democrat." De Blasio said the "huge field of candidates" for the Democratic nomination makes the race so competitive that it will be hard for one to gain the nomination. On 29 July, an ineffective sniper attack on the Bolsheviks and their search party in the vicinity of the village of Perevodka (to the east of Mihaylovka) resulted in one Red Army soldier being killed. Fighting continued through the next day, but the village was captured by the Bolsheviks on 1 August. The search party was ambushed near the village of Lozovaya, and six of its members were killed (while the rest managed to escape). A counter-attack, consisting of 50 members of the Mihaylovka "Vikzhel" detachment, failed, and all were captured. At midday on 3 August, a counter-attack from the southwest started, led by Major Bespalov. The Whites were driven back, however, and the next morning, a large detachment led by Lieutenant-Colonel Pestrikov crossed the Vidikhta River and started fighting at the foot of the mountain range. The Bolsheviks were successfully counter-attacked on 4 August, and the troops were forced back into the village of Chistoyevo. On 7 August, the "Drëvog" detachment ended its operation. The "Vikzhel" and the "Mihaylovka" detachments lost 17 killed and 23 wounded, as well as several prisoners.
