Your printer will be back to its default settings. urine cytology. Persistent cultures with scarce or no growth are considered to be insignificant or negative cytology. Differential diagnosis {#sec1-3}

===== Differential diagnosis of the tumors that secrete calcium oxalate crystals is variable. The presence of the crystals themselves and the histology of the lesion aid in narrowing down the diagnosis. The main differential diagnoses in a child of a congenital lesion or in an infant who has a tumor is urachal adenocarcinoma. However, normal urachal epithelium contains intracellular crystals that are not as large as those seen in our case. \[[@ref8]\] Other important differential diagnosis include epithelium laden with cocci and rods. Since all *E. coli* are oxidase negative, the cocci that are present should be oxidase positive. Histopathology will differentiate the *E. coli* from the cocci. The epithelium laden with cocci and rods is typically seen in urinary tract infections or with intrauterine catheterization. The presence of multinucleate giant cells in urachal adenocarcinoma is suggestive of infection, as the case of our patient was found to be positive for *Klebsiella* and *Proteus* growth in urine. The presence of intraluminal crystals in the case of alveolar soft part sarcoma may be suggestive of urachal adenocarcinoma. \[[@ref2]\] Adenocarcinoma with intracellular pseudoglands may be confused with urachal adenocarcinoma. Intraluminal calcification with surface calcification also raises the possibility of urachal adenocarcinoma. Treatment {#sec1-
