Border setting (if your window is not set to be fully opaque) 5. Display full-sized screen shots and various combinations of image thumbnails 6. Quickly search through saved screen shots 7. Export each screen shot to your hard drive Screen Capture for MSWord is a Windows application and can be downloaded from the following site: I want to read and/or write to a text file in a way that it's organized in groups and columns. For example, I'd like to have 2, or maybe more, groups for the same article: the year, month, and possibly the number of pages published; and the title of the article. Also, I want to have the month, day, and year written in chronological order. Should these 3 names be in groups, and if so, how should I organize them? We have a website that uses a "This Time It's Personal" message. The message is a long, personalized letter, which is composed of pieces from all of the people who know the client. Before the user can enter this information, however, it's necessary to first do a search in the database for the most appropriate words that make the most sense in the context of the message. The problem is, when the user enters a word that comes up, the search isn't very quick. It takes too long to run the search and then display the results. Even though the app has been optimized for speed, it's still taking far too long. So, I need to find a way to speed up the search, so that the users can enter words more quickly. The app can allow multiple words to be entered, which means there may be more than one way to write something. So, I need the app to
