For me, and I'm sure for you too, that black and white image (1) combined with the incredibly low budget (2) gives the film an otherworldly feel. Viewers should be aware that the guys who are the worst in the world at their job, are in fact, the best at inventing gadgets. What I mean is, as soon as a guy is on the toilet and needs to pee, his mind immediately goes into overdrive and he knows that he can't walk around his house without the use of an electronic device. In this movie, we see in one scene how James, the intellectual has saved the world from being incinerated in a nuclear missile. As James is staring at the detonation device of a missile, a group of men appear at his window and tell him to step outside and get blown to Kingdom Come. When he turns around, he sees that the men are talking about someone named "John Doe". James asks who John Doe is. Someone, who just happens to be his neighbor, says John Doe is the atomic bomb. James asks who John Doe is. Someone, who just happens to be his neighbor, says John Doe is the atomic bomb. The next morning, James wakes up and says "Huh!" in the morning, he then remembers the John Doe thing. He spends the day talking to himself about "John Doe", until he leaves for work. At work, he can't stand the fact that a woman is sitting behind the desk. He tells her he has to go for a walk. So she tells him he can go as long as he doesn't get busted. He's not worried about getting busted. He goes outside and stops at a flower field on the way to work, talking to himself about the John Doe thing. He comes to the part where he tells the woman at his office that he has to go to the bathroom for a moment, and as soon as he leaves the building, he is met by 3 men. They tell him that he is now under arrest, and tell him he is now John Doe. He believes them and then runs away. As he runs away, he sees a reflection of his dead mom and her boyfriend, with the couple looking at him. It turns out the mom 3da54e8ca3
