Latest Tom Tom lyrics in English and Indian language.Saturday, July 6, 2013 The Perfect Way To Cook A dear friend of mine recently posted this on Facebook and it just made me wonder and made me think about the things in life I have come to know, for better or for worse. Here's what he had to say. "Being in the kitchen is the perfect way to spend time with family and friends... It's where you eat, laugh and cry as your share the good times and bad. It's where he teaches you to be the best...and you surprise him with the biggest birthday cake ever." I agree wholeheartedly. This blog site reflects a lot of the activities I go through every week in the kitchen. Cooking isn't just a chore, but it's a great way to spend time with my people. Having your folks over to cook a good meal or cook for each other is priceless. I look forward to seeing what you come up with in your kitchen and keep your spirits up! HI! It's nice to meet you! I'm a mama in the making! (just turnin' heads now) I am always cooking. I am cooking over 100 meals a week. I'm adding recipes to my blog. If you need a meal plan, girl you need this. Check me out on Facebook: About Me This Blog is a way of sharing my recipes with family and friends. I enjoy cooking and really like to share my recipes, tips and tricks with you. Come back often to see what new dishes are on the blog. You can reach me at traviscooking@yahoo.comQ: Laravel query builder paginate with where and or conditions I have this query. I have 2 tables, each one has a column called "status" and when I want to retreive all the records of one table I use status='open' and when I want to retreive all the records of the other table I use status='status'. I use this query: $data=MyTable::where(function($query)

Because they are composed primarily of contractile elements, the fibers in a muscle constitute an anatomically functional group. They function together in movement of the body parts. In a typical sarcomere, all of the contractile elements (actin and myosin) are arranged in a single row parallel to the fiber axis and are thus arranged in a single "strand". In general, each fiber is of a constant diameter in all its length. In skeletal muscle fibers, the fibers are in series with each other. There are some exceptions to this. For example, in some heart muscle fiber types, the fibers are arranged in parallel with each other; in the heart, there are mainly two different types of muscle fiber, long and short; the short fibers provide most of the contractile force. As is evident from the above, the main difference between cardiac muscle and skeletal muscle is that muscle fibers in the heart are arranged in parallel with each other, whereas in the skeletal muscle the muscle fibers are arranged in series with each other. Myocardium Myocardium (literally "heart muscle") is the term used for cardiac muscle tissue. It constitutes the thickness of the wall of the heart, which is a muscular organ involved in the circulation of blood. It is soft and pliable, except where striated muscle fibers are involved. The myocardium is composed of a network of cardiac muscle fibers, which are arranged in series and cross-linked. The myocardium of the heart is a muscular organ. In contrast to skeletal muscle, it is an involuntary muscle, thus the heart does not need much stimulus to contract. Thus, much of the cardiac muscle is not required to perform work to move blood, as is the case in skeletal muscle, and can instead be conserved. It is composed of two types of fibers, striated cardiac muscle fibers and smooth cardiac muscle fibers. The muscle fibers are arranged in series and 3e33713323
