Subs Grabber allows you to search the web for video, audio and subtitle files. You can search for video, audio, and subtitle files on the web. The subtitle file is a text file that has additional information about the video, such as the name of the author, the language, copyright information and the size. The subtitles can come from many sources. You can use a database to find the subtitles, or you can search the Internet for new or old subtitles. You can upload the downloaded subtitles to a subtitle program, for example, you can create a personal video library with SubsGrabber to store your movies and TV-shows. The movie file, the title, IMDB link and the poster can be search in the database of movie. The correct subtitle can be found by choosing the movie file with the specified title and searching for the subtitle file with the subtitles, which are shown in the pictures. First, your description of the app sounds way too perfect for what it actually is, which shouldn't be a perfect description. Try using "Downloading subtitles" instead, you'll get better feedback and more users. But as the app itself is fine, use whatever you like. Dangerous Business 69 Downloading subtitles for your movies is an easy task with so many websites created in this regard, but Subs Grabber lets you do the same thing from the comfort of your desktop. The application was developed to help you search for subtitles and download them with just a few clicks, but it also provides some other options to enhance the whole process. There are two searching modes available, both of them capable of looking for subtitles on no less than 10 online databases, with support for many languages, including Romanian, Italian, French, English and German. First of all, there's the typical searching method that requires you to write down a keyword and thus look for a specific subtitle, but a second and more effective solution is also available. You can use a movie stored on the local disks to search for a subtitle, with Subs Grabber collecting video information and thus returning the correct subtitle. Besides the powerful subtitle search engine, Subs Grabber also comprises a subtitle uploading utility to let others download the file, but lots of details are required. You have to input movie file, title, IMDB link, plot and genre, poster, subtitle author, language, format, number of CDs and FPS
