involved in upgrading a Sails.js application? I'm working on upgrading a Sails.js application to use the Waterline ORM, and I have a couple of questions: Does the upgrade to a newer version of Sails.js involve an upgrade of Waterline or even the underlying data store that's used (mongoose)?
Is there a practical way to just upgrade the API, with no regard for the backend of the application?
In other words, what is involved in updating a configurable endpoint in the api/models folder? (the request that would use that endpoint) A: Does the upgrade to a newer version of Sails.js involve an upgrade of Waterline or even the underlying data store that's used (mongoose)? Yes. You can't (or should be able to) run 2 versions of sails against 2 different versions of mongo. One of them must upgrade. Is there a practical way to just upgrade the API, with no regard for the backend of the application? In other words, what is involved in updating a configurable endpoint in the api/models folder? Not really. Waterline is monolithic (it's one app, not 3). The only workaround is to get down to the low level and start over. That can be a nasty design smell. KTHV (disambiguation)

The purpose of this study was to examine the relationship between sleep duration and age, and circadian preferences for activity and alertness in adolescent females. The circadian preferences of sleep duration and age, and the interaction of these two factors were examined in a cross-sectional design using 24-hour ambulatory monitoring. Data were collected on 95 adolescent females (13-16 years old) who had sleep-wake patterns that consisted of at least two weekdays and two weekend days. Sleep duration, age, and circadian preferences were examined in relation to the percentage of time spent active or inactive during the 24-hour day and subjective ratings of alertness and sleepiness. Sleep duration significantly increased, and activity levels decreased as age increased; younger girls were significantly less active than older girls. Age and sleep duration also interacted such that when chronological age was greater than the median of 11.8 years, girls with short sleep durations (approximately 9 hours). In contrast, when chronological age was less than the median, the reverse was true. Over the longer sleep-wake cycles among the older girls, an increase in age was associated with significantly more alertness than the increase in age that was found among the younger girls. The findings suggest that the tendency to be more active and alert decreases as the number of hours of sleep increases, that there is a reciprocal relationship between age and the circadian preferences for activity and alertness, and that the ability to maintain alertness increases with increasing age and decreasing sleep duration in adolescent females.In patients with coronary artery 3da54e8ca3
