The example is the following: import org.json4s._ case class Test(a: Int) object JsonTest extends App { implicit def toTest(x: Test): Test = { new Test(x.a) } val test = toTest(Test(0)) println(test.toString) } I would expect that the output of this code is: {"a":0} Instead what I'm getting is: {"a":null} As you can see it seems to be what's calling the default iorSerialize implementation instead of my own. Looking at the scala source code for DefaultIORSerializer in ScalaJSONImplicits.scala I can see that it calls iorSerialize with a toString method and this code is defined in NormalizerImplementation.scala. val load = new NormalizerImplementation def toString(implicit ctx: ScopedContext): String = { val loaded = ctx.loadAny if (loaded != null) { loaded match { case unit: Unit => Unit case _ =>
