Venezuela's opposition agrees on unity talks Published duration 4 April 2014 image copyright Reuters image caption The opposition group Vente Venezuela has vowed to challenge President Nicolas Maduro's control of the country The opposition and the president of Venezuela's National Assembly have agreed to talks. The alliance of groups that make up the opposition coalition, Vente Venezuela, has called for a general strike on Saturday, which it hopes will force President Nicolas Maduro to hold talks with it. Mr Maduro has demanded opposition leaders turn themselves in. But Mr Maduro's chief of staff, Tareck El Aissami, said he did not want to "set a trap for the Venezuelan people". He said the National Guard had to be ready to protect them if they were attacked. "If the armed forces are called to the streets, we will not hesitate to call on them," Mr El Aissami said. media caption Venezuelan government spokesman: 'What we want are serious talks' The opposition is split between those who want to overthrow the government and those who are calling for a referendum on whether the president should remain in power. "What we want are serious talks to save Venezuela," said Vente Venezuela's chief negotiator, Jesus Torrealba, in a BBC interview at a meeting between the two sides at the UN headquarters in New York. The government said the talks would be mediated by the Catholic Church. The government-controlled state-run RCTV television network reported that union leaders had been taken into custody following a Wednesday night anti-government protest. The union leaders are said to be members of a general assembly created by the government to take over from the elected National Assembly.

No law passed in 2016 will have as much impact on New York as the Commercial Law Revision Commission's "revision and renumbering" of the entire body of New York's civil, criminal and administrative laws and rules, which went into effect on March 13. This revision—which will be completed in 2017—brings myriad changes, some of them small and some of them substantial, to the law. This article will attempt to summarize the most important changes that will impact New York real estate and landlord tenant matters. We will begin with the most obvious: the comprehensive renumbering of laws from the statutes themselves, through the administrative codes to the administrative regulations. Any new statute, code, rule, order or regulation that regulates real estate, landlord tenant or any other real estate related matter will take on the new number. This will occur throughout New York State, because some statutes or codes 3e33713323
