It will determine how many delegates Richmond will earn in the 2012 Democratic presidential primary and which, if any, of the area's politicians will be chosen for the same seat in Congress. Never miss a local story. To familiarize the community with the census, the Greater Richmond Chamber of Commerce organized a census information day Tuesday at the Carytown Farmer's Market. City officials, politicians and community activists joined representatives from the Census Bureau to answer residents' questions. The census will count residents in each household, the number of people in each household and the number of occupied housing units in each neighborhood. "The census is basically a big survey with about 18,000 questions," says Jim Rudmin, spokesman for the federal Census Bureau. If residents do not fill out the survey, the census determines the number of jobs and housing units. "It's essential that we have everyone counted," Rudmin said. The population was counted by mail in years past, but this time, it is conducted by a census taker who visits the household in person. "We expect that the census taker will make about 150 visits a month," Rudmin said. If a census
