In this example, you see layers "2" through "7." * **Figure 1.3C** : Create a new image in Photoshop with a blank canvas, and add a new layer. A few can be altered using the Layers panel, the Properties palette, or the panel on the left in the Photoshop Help documents; this is shown in the insert image. **Creating Gradients** It's best to use the gradient brush in Photoshop when the gradient is _very_ thin (two pixels wide or less). If you make a gradient brush with one pixel wide, you will start to see some problems. What happens is that the pixels that should blend together instead look like a border between two image areas. To make the effect more dramatic, you can make the gradient brush large.

Luxembourg: The unique history of Luxembourg has been shaped by its neighbors. It was Germanic tribes that first decided to settle down in the rich river valley of the Meuse, about 10 BC. Their capital was moved several times to the Rhine, but Dacia was given up for lost. Until 15 BC, when the Romans controlled the area, Dacia was the scene of a number of rebellions and invasions by Celtic tribes. About AD 200, the Romans under Emperor Septimius Severus made an alliance with the king of the area, who built his capital there. His descendants became the limes (here, line of encampments) on the Roman-influenced model. In the 5th century, the Franks invaded and conquered, and by the end of the century, the Merovingian dynasty ruled the territory. In the 7th century, the area was overrun by Germanic tribes, and Charlemagne brought it under his control. He reigned for 30 years and introduced Christianity. When he died in 814, his children divided the kingdom into three counties. Luxembourg went to Lothair, but during the 10th century, territory was returned to Germany and was reduced to a duchy. In the 12th century, the duchy was conquered by the French. About this time, a small church was built, and the town of Luxembourg was founded. The family of the Merovingian king, Merie, was still ruling when the Romans conquered again in the 5th century. The Merovingian kings claimed the title of duke and called themselves Roi. By AD 700, they were using the title Rex Francorum. (See map above.) The Merovingian rex died in AD 751, when his son died without issue. The duchy was then inherited by two of the Merovingian kings' great-uncles, and passed through the family until AD 840. Bishop Hatto of Metz established a castle in the Meuse river valley for the Merovingian king, who would live at the castle until the end of his life. Hatto had the church, whose modern name is Notre-Dame de Corbeil, built on the hill. When the new castle was completed, he founded the ducal capital there. The dynasty was not immediately
