It also has troubleshooting tips and troubleshooting tips for new users in English. “This is why, for the first time, more than half of Democrats say they will not support the eventual Democratic nominee.” Remember how Hillary Clinton was assured that there was a floor for her superdelegates to “contribute” to her victory? Well, that floor has just about been shattered as more and more superdelegates are announcing their votes for her. They're starting to trickle out, and it's not good: It's no mystery to anybody what Hillary Clinton's Superdelegates are going to do. She's going to win. She's so likely going to win that literally half of the "Big Digits" backing her have already pledged to her. And the story is changing daily as they catch on to the fact that they're going to be signing Hillary's death warrant unless they get out of the way and start supporting some other candidate who has a real chance. Hillary Clinton's superdelegates stand to lose their seats in Congress if she wins the nomination. If she loses, they'll still lose their jobs. But Hillary is certain to be the nominee. So they're faced with the choice: support Hillary Clinton and lose their congressional power or support some other candidate with a chance of beating Hillary and lose their jobs. What a dilemma.

---

The Big Dig numbers are definitely not good. They've now risen to more than half (51.7%). — Ed 29, 2016 And they're rising. This is actually below 50% for the first time. — Ed Morrissey

Not a good sign: This is, for the first time, more than half of
