Kamala Harris (D-CA) spoke with MSNBC's Chuck Todd on Thursday and initially refused to answer his questions about answering a question about whether she is a socialist. Todd asked Harris why she was not answering questions about whether she is a socialist. "Chuck, I can tell you I have never identified myself as a member of the Democratic party," Harris said. "Okay, but you're running to be the leader of the Democratic Party," Todd shot back. "Okay," Harris answered. "So you're identifying yourself as a candidate for the nomination of that party," Todd said. "No, no, no," Harris said, "this isn't a high school debate. This is about structural racism, about the fact that the United States right now is the only major country that doesn't guarantee health care to all people." Harris then cited the 1968 Democrat candidate for president, Hubert Humphrey. "I think the country's ready for somebody who is prepared to take on the establishment on the one hand — that has already made all the compromises," she continued, "but who is also fighting to expand opportunity." "So are you a socialist?" Todd asked. "Is what socialist?" Harris shot back. "You talked about wanting to take on the establishment," Todd pressed, "and it sounds like what you're describing is fighting for better opportunity. How is that not socialist?" "Chuck, you're picking — I mean, you're playing the game here, Chuck," she said. "So I think we've answered this question, but you wanted to ask me about it." "Are you running because you have the answers?" Todd asked. "No, not
