So, then I have done research and changed my business logic to do a little bit of preprocessing first to get the flags of the objects instead of getting them as arrays as such: { "filter": { "query": { "query_string": { "query": "title:Manojlo%" } } }, "query": { "query_string": { "query": "title:Manojlo%" } } } Still returns the array of objects though. But then, this time I've created a little bit of some pre-processing logic to deserialize the flags from the JSON, pass them to my finder method via a map of the key of the new object with the original object. So the code of the method now looks like this: @Override public List findAll(final String query) { if (query == null) { log.info("Indexing all messages..."); updateIndex(); } else { log.info("Query: {}", query); List messages = null; return messages; } Map map = new HashMap(); map.put("query", query); Query query = client().prepareSearch().setIndices(index).setTypes(type).setSource(new QuerySourceBuilder(new QueryBuilder() { @Override public Query build() {
