The latest version of the software has been released in. the GMR sensors were covered with a protective layer to allow for chemical etching. A second etching step was then performed to open this layer and define the different metal layers which were of alternating thickness. The final structure included two perovskite layers, a metallic electrode, and a PMGI layer. The thickness of the organic layer was chosen to have a fair overlap with the perovskite layer, as shown in Supplementary Figure 1{ref-type="media"}. A drop of the PMGI solution was placed in contact with a surface of the perovskite, and the sample was kept at 60 °C for 10 min. The sample was then taken out and placed in isopropanol for 5 min to allow the PMGI to polymerize on the surface. Contact-GMR setup {#Sec11} ----- The contact sensor was performed in a commercial AC-driven bridge setup (Keithley 6485 picoammeter/voltmeter, Tektronix AFG3202 Function Generator). The drain current  $I_D$  was measured as a function of the magnetic field  $B$  applied along the hard axis of the CoFeB magnet. The structure of the contact sensor was a pair of CoFeB nanodots (rectangle
