Head of the IMF Christine Lagarde (c) and Vice Premier Zhang Gaoli (R) attend a signing ceremony in Beijing, China December 11, 2017. REUTERS/Jason Lee China's central bank governor is in Washington on Wednesday for meetings with officials at the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Treasury. The vice-governor, Zhang Xiaoming, told reporters in Beijing on Tuesday that China expects the United States to stick to its support for a "proper role" for the IMF and its sister international institutions. "The U.S. side needs to listen to the fact that China also does not want to play the role of a supervisory body for the IMF," Zhang said, according to the state-run Xinhua news agency. "We insist that there should be a proper role for the IMF." Zhang also said China would not agree to a binding quota system for the IMF. The IMF has been reviewing its operating procedures, but have not announced any major changes. Under this year's governance changes proposed by the IMF executive board, China was granted one-quarter of the body's second-most powerful executive board position, the Managing Director seat, for the first time in history. The change is due to take effect in January 2018 and China hopes to avoid a repeat of the dispute between U.S. and European members over the issuance of new debt and limit the role of China as the sole managing director. "The U.S. has met the conditions for the IMF's next fiscal year and will continue to pay its full quota, but we have also been gradually changing our voting rights," Zhang told reporters. "We hope the current consensus is of mutual benefit." It is unclear whether China will fulfil its ambition of having a China-only committee at the IMF, which China's vice-premier warned to remain within the rules of a multilateral institution. "We have no specific plan but China should not do anything that would influence the outcome of the meetings," Zhang said. Western officials have said China's new role at the IMF will not change its strategic objectives of supporting "Made in China 2025" and the Belt and Road Initiative.Payment 570a42141b
