What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.2)?

Obama has proposed the creation of a "super-prosecutor" who will have the power to go after people within the financial industry who contributed to the economic crisis. "If you look at the last four years, there's been more folks indicted in the financial sector than in any other sector," said Obama at a roundtable discussion of the economy in Miami, Florida. "We didn't just call the cops on Wall Street; we got tough on the people who were responsible for causing this crisis." Obama noted that that 935 people have been indicted in connection with the financial crisis, including 150 people who have been prosecuted for fraud. But Obama wants to go even further: "We're going to have a prosecutor's office that's just focused on this -- and I've already called for a team of people to begin to set this up, to come up with recommendations, to suggest an organizational structure. I want people who have the 'Son of Sam' on Wall Street to lead it." The reality is that the heads of Citigroup, Merrill Lynch, and Morgan Stanley have all already begun to roll as a result of the economic crisis. The Securities and Exchange Commission has already settled charges that Morgan Stanley defrauded investors after betting against the house of mortgage securities. But what about the smaller players on Wall Street? There are hundreds of hedge funds, private equity firms, and investment banks that were responsible for selling subprime mortgages to people who couldn't afford them. While these companies did what they did, there are almost always many more at the individual level, like John Paulson, who were more directly responsible than the companies. During Obama's speech, Obama noted that under his plan, "When people are making decisions to do the wrong thing, or to not do the right thing, and they are rewarded for it, we're going to fine them." But is this the right way to go? Why not fine banks, since they got the money from reckless borrowers? Financial journalist, Allan Sloan, says that financial sector employees are going to fight the new plan tooth and nail. "We should be celebrating this guy," said Sloan, about Obama. "The idea that he's about to go after people who made over-the-top, if they didn't take it, well we'd get a pail of water and a sandwich, is a sign that we're on the right track. But
