The invention relates to a device for cleaning the surface of a copper plated steel strip with chemicals and more particularly to such a device using a plurality of revolving cleaning rollers to simultaneously clean and polish the surface of the steel strip. In fabricating steel sheet from molten metal, it is necessary to cool the sheet to a desired temperature before rolling, as well as to plicate the sheet. As a result, a copper plated steel sheet is usually formed into a continuous strip which is in turn heated before entering a mill train for cold rolling. The copper plated steel strip is then fed into the mill train for hot rolling and subsequent cold rolling and cold finishing. The copper plated steel strip suffers from contamination and oxidation during the various plating and rolling processes. Each processing station in the mill train contributes to the overall contamination and oxidation of the plated steel strip. An improved cooling and plating of the steel strip is described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,558,022 to Schaeffer et al. wherein a continuous steel strip is continuously cooled by passing the strip through a chamber containing a high velocity stream of cooling water and being plated by contact with a copper plating bath. The water stream cools the steel strip to a desired temperature prior to plating. U.S. Pat. No. 3,822,990 to Frass et al. describes a machine for cleaning and applying a coating to a continuously moving metal strip. A plurality of rolls extending in a linear array are used to clean and apply a coating to the surface of the metal strip. The rolls are rotated in a constant direction which is perpendicular to the direction of movement of the steel strip. The rolls are provided with blades which nip the strip causing friction between the strip and the blades and the rotation of the rolls. A multiplicity of such rolls and blades are arranged across the width of the metal strip to provide a uniform coating for the strip. Both of the above described devices are manually operated by personnel and subject the metal strip to possible damage by the personnel. Further, neither device provides an automatic cleaning or rolling action on the metal strip

For example: If a user clicks on a post on the front-end, then it changes to Is there a way I can do this? Thanks A: If you click on a post, by default the comments are displayed in modal mode. This means that the comment form is displayed inside a window. Instead of redirecting the user in this case it would be more appropriate to show the comments as popups. Add this code to your functions.php: add_filter( 'comment_form_default_fields','modal_comments_fields' ); function modal_comments_fields( $fields ) { $fields['after_title'] = 'Comments for this post'; return $fields; } add_action( 'comment_form_after_title','modal_comments_after_title' ); function modal_comments_after_title() { comments_modal_open(); } The code example below: $( '.comment-form' ).on( 'click', '.cancel', function(e) { e.preventDefault(); comments_modal_close(); }); comments_modal_open(); function comments_modal_close() { comments_modal_close(); } Taken from the Wordpress Codex Documentation Robert J.
