There is an Adobe Creative Suite that bundles Photoshop, Illustrator, InDesign, and other Adobe products. It's available in a variety of packages with varying prices, depending on how much you want to buy. See Appendix A for details. Essential tools for photographers Many photographers use Photoshop to fix image problems, crop photos, work with layers, remove blemishes, manage albums, and create mini-albums. When you are truly serious about your work, you need to pay attention to all the little things that add up, too. The following list shows you the essentials for a professional photographer: File-saving software: You can use your choice of software for file-saving — Adobe's Premiere Pro comes highly recommended as a viable option — but Photoshop works well for this task, so that's what I suggest. Most file-saving software can only save as JPEG, but JPEG is a standard format that any imaging software can work with. Printing: You can also use your printer to print images with Photoshop but, in most cases, it's better to save them as a JPEG file and print them when you have the time. This approach saves paper and ink. Previewing: Software such as Photoshop and Photoshop Elements lets you view the image and make sure it looks the way you want it to. Although you can view your image on the computer monitor, it's best to view the image on a screen larger than the monitor. Color adjustments: The more you have to do with color-grading your images, the more accurate your color adjustments need to be. Selecting a solid or white area of an image and clicking the Adjustments panel's Brightness/Contrast button is an important adjustment. Clicking the Colors button and then choosing from the Edit Colors window is another key color adjustment. Clicking the Hue/Saturation adjustment and then moving the color sliders — Hue, Saturation, and Value — and then clicking OK when the adjustments are displayed lets you adjust the saturation and brightness of all three colors — red, green, and blue. Background deleting: Selecting the Background layer and then deleting it is a key operation that many photographers perform. This important step makes sure that you don't inadvertently delete anything else in the image. The Background layer is usually invisible in most images, but is crucial for arranging objects in front of a person or any other element in the image. Blur: Selecting the Blur layer and then applying a

Q: How to Enable/Disable button based on first and second click? I have an HTML button like this : I have used a click event handler to check if the user has already selected the button, and enable it if the user hasn't. In the back-end, I am returning a boolean value to the server. `$("#btn").click(function(){ var isSelected = $(this).is(':checked'); if (!isSelected){ //Enable the button alert("New User Selected"); } else{ //Disable the button } });` However, I don't want to disable the button if the user selects the button with the first click (default behavior). But if the user selects the button with the second click, then I would like to disable the button. A: You can add an additional click handler that removes the "disabled" attribute from the button (if the "disabled" attribute exists), and then re-add that attribute on the second click. `$("#btn").click(function(){ var isSelected = $(this).is(':checked'); if (!isSelected){ //Enable the button alert("New User Selected"); } else{ //Disable the button } $("[type=button]:disabled").prop('disabled', false); }); $("[type=button]").click(function(){ $("[type=button]:disabled").prop('disabled', true); });` Or better yet, attach the "disabled" attribute to the "button" tag itself, and then just unset the "disabled" attribute using Javascript before attaching it on the second click. ... `$('#button').prop('disabled', false); $('#button').prop('disabled', true);`

Q: Angular,.then and.catch not returning data I'm sure I am doing something very stupid so any help would be much appreciated. I'm trying to display some JSON data from an API call. It is stored into a variable called 'data'. I have tried to split it up as best as I can with.then and.catch like you would see in the code examples, but so far it has not worked. I'm sure it is very simple and I am missing something very obvious, but I can't find it. my angular controller file. `/// /// /// /// /// /// var app = angular.module('MyApp', ['ngRoute','ui.router', 'MyApp.services']); app.config(function ($routeProvider, $locationProvider) { $locationProvider.html5Mode(true); $routeProvider.when('/', { templateUrl: 'views/main.html', controller: 'MainCtrl' }).when('/user/:user_id', { templateUrl: 'views/user.html', controller: 'UserCtrl' }).otherwise({ redirectTo: '/' }); }); app.controller('MainCtrl',['$scope','$location','$http','UserService', function ($scope, $location, $http, UserService) { $scope.user_id = 1; $http.get('users/' + $scope.user_id) .success(function(data) {`
