JERUSALEM, Sept 28 (Reuters) - Wasp-yellow wheat stretches across a field on the edge of the Mediterranean Sea and the wheat is no less intoxicating than the wine from which the new variety's name is taken. Moroccan and French wine producers have decided that this year, more than ever, they need to find a way to export to Israel. It is the only country besides the United States that grows its own grapes and the Israelis make the best wine in the Middle East, says French winemaker Francois Grosjean. Grosjean and his twin brother, Olivier, are keen to bring their annual pop-up wine festival to Tel Aviv, something they have done in the past 10 years. So they have been to Israel, Italy and France, looking at grape varieties. They crossed Moroccan and Roman grapes and came up with a new variety they call "Mahda" in an attempt to create the benchmark varietal for what they hope will be an entirely new wave of Israeli wine producers. The word "Mahda" means "accomplishment" in Arabic and the siblings also made a "Mahda" wine, using about 50 percent Moroccans. Whether their project will bear fruit will depend on the results of Israel's groundbreaking wine industry, which in recent years has picked up pace. Israel is now one of the world's fastest-growing wine markets, and Israeli winemakers are racking up notable success at international trade fairs. "Israel's wines are getting better every year," Francois Grosjean said. "The problem is for Israeli wines to be like the grapes," he added. Grosjean and his twin brother have already made several successful joint Israeli-French wines. Over the years, they have become strategic partners in the Middle East with their numerous contacts in the wine trade. The Grosjean brothers have also been in Israel to attend the Shriekfest wine festival in the north Israeli city of Safed, which takes place from Sept. 27 to Oct. 5 this year. Their goal is to try to put their wine on the Hebrew and Arabic markets as well as on the European market. Yet there are still significant hurdles. I AM SO HAPPY! I BOUGHT THIS ITEM A WEEK AGO. I WAS THINKING THAT IT SURE THAT I WILL NEVER GET BACK HOME TO WASH THE FUCKING STUFF I HAD IN MY HAND AFTER I LEAVE THIS PLACE. I WAS WRONG. 3 DAYS OF WASHING, CLEANING, WAS THE EXACT AMOUNT OF TIME IT TOOK TO WASH AND AMOUNT TO FIT FITS EVERY SIZE. THANKS TRIPLE DAI & RYU KI MATSURI FOR THE GREAT JOB! Paraformaldehyde-induced liver toxicity in the rat. Paraformaldehyde (PF) was administered ip at the same LD50 (1.7 mg/kg) in adult male Sprague-Dawley rats fed either a normal or low-fat diet. A time-dose course experiment for 5 days with four different dosing protocols was conducted to determine the onset and duration of liver toxicity as well as the type of toxicity observed. With the highest dose, all animals developed liver toxicity within 24 hr. No histopathologic evidence of PF-induced toxicity was observed in the livers of animals euthanized after 5 days and at 2 months following dosing. A significant difference (p less than 0.001) was seen in the number of granulocytes in the hepatic portal circulation of rats fed a low-fat diet as compared to the number observed in rats fed a normal diet. Administration of N-acetylcysteine (NAC) to rats, pretreated for 10 days with PF and fed a low-fat diet, prevented the granulocytic infiltration. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION FEB 18 2010
