A Comparison of the Effects of Small Surgical Site Incision in Laparoscopic Versus Open Surgery on Sterile Postoperative Wound Infection Rates and Cost of Care. We conducted this study to determine whether the use of small laparoscopic surgical site incision would result in a lower incidence of postoperative wound infections than would the use of traditional laparotomy. This study was conducted at a single tertiary-care hospital with a focus on the management of orthopedic and vascular surgery patients. The cost of care associated with a small laparoscopic surgical site incision was compared with that associated with a traditional laparotomy for 20 consecutive patients who met our study criteria. Small incision laparoscopy was shown to be cost saving, with an average reduction in the cost of care of approximately $47,571 (43%) at the hospital level. The results of our study demonstrate that, in our hospital's orthopedic and vascular surgery clinics, the use of small incision laparoscopy decreases the incidence of postoperative wound infections by 35% and is associated with a lower cost of care when compared with the use of traditional laparotomy. Further research is necessary to more definitively determine whether similar savings will be achieved in other hospital surgical services and by other types of surgical procedures.[Content] [Face] [Gender] [Genre] [Release date] The first capsule collection of Botanica, a new high-end cosmetics brand, is a mixture of natural and premium products
