Time is the way we can synchronize all of our activities and improve task efficiency. With the Internet reaching most computers, it's possible to have the system time always updated. This method doesn't need to involve a lot of effort, and can even be an automated process if done with applications like TimeRC. Can be used on the go First of all, there's no need to go through a setup process to make the application work, so you can take it for a spin as soon as it reaches your computer. It can thus be carried around on a thumb drive to use on other computers, without putting a strain on stability, mostly because registry entries are not altered in the process. It is a good idea to make sure you're Internet connection is stable, at least when attempting to synchronize the time. The configuration window shows up on launch, but the application can quietly sit in the tray area when you don't need to make any adjustments. In fact, only a runtime is required every now and then to be sure time is updated. Extra details and server selection There are several tabs found in the configuration panel to show general status, Sun and Moon details, as well as application behavior options. Whereas the status only shows time and server, Sun and Moon details also display lists of new and full Moon dates, as well as meteor showers in case you want to make a couple of wishes. The application comes with an impressive variety of time servers you can connect to, and you're also free to manually add your own. For an automated process, there's the possibility to make the application run with Windows and synchronize the time when it launches. A few last words Taking everything into consideration, we can state that TimeRC is a practical little application you can use to make sure you're always on the right time. It quietly sits in the tray area and can automatically update time when you reach the desktop. TimeRC is a very useful application which can be found on the Net today. It can automatically adjust the time for the computer as soon as it is started, even when Internet connection is unavailable or unstable. Can be used on the go First of all, there's no need to go through a setup process to make the application work, so you can take it for a spin as soon as it reaches your computer.
