[8.5/10] Differential solvation effects on excited-state intramolecular charge transfer versus intrinsic fluorescence. Solvation effects on the steady-state fluorescence and phosphorescence of a 1,8-naphthalimide-bromo-azadibenzene donor-acceptor adduct have been investigated in n-octanol and toluene. The existence of long-range charge transfer has been confirmed by its sensitivity to solvent polarity. As the solvent polarity increases, the steady-state fluorescence efficiency decreases, whereas the steady-state phosphorescence efficiency increases. Moreover, the static and time-resolved photophysical studies reveal that the increase in the steady-state phosphorescence efficiency is a result of increasing phosphorescence lifetime with increasing solvent polarity. The emission of the 1,8-naphthalimide-bromo-azadibenzene donor-acceptor adduct in a mixed solvent of toluene and n-octanol is also investigated. Differential solvation effects on the steady-state fluorescence and phosphorescence properties of the donor-acceptor adduct are also observed. The World Bank is the latest to join the movement to offer better financial services to the world's unbanked. The bank said on Tuesday that it will work with a local credit union in Kenya to offer virtual cards, which allow users to store money and spend it like an ATM card, without using actual cash or checking accounts. The goal is to provide greater access to financial services that can help alleviate poverty and improve living standards. The World Bank says that two-thirds of adults in Kenya live below the poverty line and more than 40 percent of those households are unbanked. The Bank's Virtual Visa card program will begin in the near future, according to the bank. "The World Bank's Virtual Visa card program is an example of how we can provide inclusive financial services that help achieve the Sustainable Development Goals," Michael Froman, World Bank managing director, said in a statement. "Providing access to financial services for everyone is critical to reducing poverty and promoting financial stability." Kenya's Commercial Bank of Africa is set to be a pilot, along with the South African credit union. The World Bank says that it plans to expand the program to other countries in the region, as well. "The world is moving closer to achieving
