In order to clarify the role of the tertiary amine group of the acid in the development of myocardial infarction, the Authors developed myocardial infarction in various animal models (dogs, rats) by various doses of maleic acid (MA) and fumaric acid (FA). Mice and guinea pigs were used as controls. The following results were obtained: 1. The heart weight/body weight (HW/BW) ratio at the level of the 25th day was significant decrease in the groups of dogs and rats receiving 2-6 times higher doses of MA than of FA; 2. The mitotic activity in myocardial tissue is very low in all the experimental groups; 3. Leukocytic infiltrate and the degree of necrosis were related to the dose of the acid administered; 4. The arteriosclerotic changes were not observed in the dogs treated with the dose of acid the least toxic; 5. Myocardial infarction develops only in dogs and rats after treatment with the doses of MA and FA the least toxic in guinea pig heart. The Authors conclude that, in physiological doses, tertiary amine group of the acid is responsible for the regeneration of the damaged heart.Q: How to get child class properties when instantiating?
